

I have been a FA for over 30 years, and my experience shows that monitoring cell phone use would be unreasonable. It would give terrorists more access and it would distract pax from important safety info that we need to impart to them. There is no REAL proof that cell phones do not interfere with AC instruments and communications and why take that chance? It is not in the best interest of aviation safety to allow the use of cell phones beyond the use today.
Thank you, Peggy Gordon
